A historical map of New York Harbor, oriented vertically. The map shows the coastline of Manhattan and the locations of several forts. On the left side, two rows of labels identify the forts: '34 S.C.' at the top and '36 S.C.' at the bottom. To the right of these labels, a vertical line runs down the center of the map, with the label 'York Harbor' written along its right edge. Further to the right, another vertical line is labeled 'Pond'. At the top of the map, there are four small rectangular fort icons labeled '34', '35', '36', and '37' from left to right. A large, irregularly shaped brown area covers the right side of the map, representing land or a specific region.

This image shows a very faint, stylized illustration on a textured, light-colored background. The drawing depicts a figure or object with a long, thin, vertical body and two thick, curved legs. It appears to be wearing a wide, flat, triangular-shaped hat. The entire illustration is rendered in a dark, thin line style, making it appear as a watermark or a very old print. There are some small, illegible markings or labels near the top left corner of the drawing.
